

Country Hedging Welcomes

Joe Barker

Joe Barker is the new branch office manager for the Kansas City office of Country Hedging, a full-service commodity broker offering expert market consultation, innovative educational programs and cutting-edge price risk management programs for both commercial businesses and individual producers.

Before his branch management appointment, Joe was a market analyst with the Country Hedging Indianapolis office. There he worked daily to provide industry insight and measurable results through risk management programs for grain, dairy, livestock and energy clients.

Joe began his agriculture career as a farm manager for Seaboard Farms in Kansas. He holds an MBA from Indiana Wesleyan University and earned his undergraduate degree in animal science from Kansas State University. Joe grew up on a farm in central Indiana.

Joe approaches each customer as their partner, committed to helping them make the right risk management decisions for the right reasons. That philosophy guides everyone under Joe's management at the Country Hedging Kansas City office, driving everything from market analysis and industry research to which programs or services they ultimately recommend. Fortunately, Country Hedging offers a full complement of price risk management tools to help Joe and his team individually craft just the right package for every client.

If you would like to learn more about how Country Hedging can help you manage price risk, visit www.countryhedging.com or call the Kansas City office at 800-553-1952 (commercial customers) or 800-961-1133 (producers).

The right decisions for the right reasons.
